

Mobile COVID-19 vaxx and testing outreach in West Baltimore

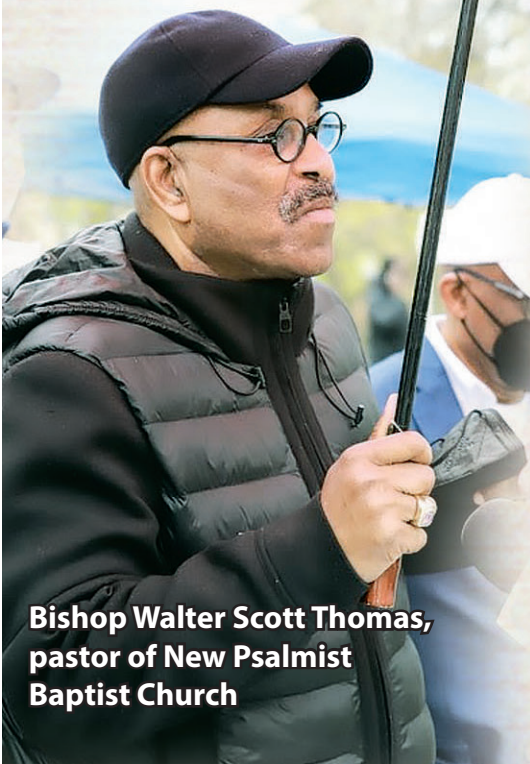

Chara Bauer, left, and Joyce Waters Total Health Care workers

On April 9, Total Health Care, one of Maryland's largest minority-run community health centers, unveiled its new Mobile Health Outreach Unit at a special community COVID-19 vaccination and testing event outside St. James Episcopal Church in West Baltimore. Nearly 100 people attended the event, and 65 received a COVID-19 vaccination. Funding for the Mobile Health Outreach Unit was provided by The Gamma Boulé Foundation (GBF) of Sigma Pi Phi Fraternity, who raised $240,000 to support the purchase of the vehicle and its ongoing operations. Additional funding for the Mobile Outreach Unit was provided by The Mamie and Jerome Todd Relief Fund. Established by Ben Jealous to support those in Baltimore most impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic, The Fund is named for his maternal grandparents who were life-long members of St. James Episcopal Church. For more information on Total Health Care, and upcoming Mobile Health Outreach events, please visit www.totalhealthcare.org

Kenneth Grant, The Gamma Boule Foundation (GBF), left, Danny Bellamy CEO Total Health Care, second to left, Senator Chris Van Hollen, center, Ben Jealous, Mamie & Jerome Todd Relief Fund and Bishop Walter Scott Thomas of New Psalmist Baptist Church

Bishop Walter Scott Thomas, pastor of New Psalmist Baptist Church

Joelle Gaines Total Health Care and Arthur Manon AJ'S Odd jobs

Devron Langley, left, and Brian Smith

Chara Bauer, Total Health Care worker

Total Health Care mobile van

A socially distant line awaits COVID-19 testing and vaccine shots.

Relief workers of St. James Episcopal Church

Larry Jackson, left, and Joe Loyal, Total Health Care

Photos by James Fields